Overview

This report introduces scholars interested in the history of psychiatry to the extraordinary collection in the HMD and NLM. This collection is unparalleled for its coverage of time and place in great depth and breadth, for its possession of immense numbers of unique audiovisual and print materials and for its invaluable holdings of manuscripts and oral histories. We have arranged our report in 10 major sections as listed below. Our time frame is primarily from the 19th century to the 1970s. For each major section we have organized items from the library in subsections by topic, date, location, or format. Within each subsection, we have listed only a small selection of materials available in the library, a selection we have chosen to illustrate the large range of sources the collection contains: scientific monographs, federal or state reports, personal accounts, conference proceedings, legal briefs, armed service publications, mass market publications, teaching materials, monographs on psychiatric ethics, treatment, or social effects, manuscripts, audiovisual materials, ephemera, and so on.

For a guide to the current scholarly literature on all these topics, the HMD web site contains an extremely useful set of syllabi used in teaching the history of psychiatry in the US and the UK. <http://www.nlm.nih.gov/hmd/collections/digital/syllabi/index.html> Since by our reckoning, virtually all the contemporary texts and edited collections cited in these syllabi are available in the general collection of the NLM or the HMD, we have not provided a separate listing of these major contemporary scholarly resources here.

Prehistory of psychiatry

Prehistory of psychiatry

Studies of nineteenth century cultures of mental healing

Nineteenth century healing practices, especially phrenology and mental healing

Included in this section are selected contemporary works on nineteenth-century hydro-therapy, neurasthenia, mesmerism and phrenology as well as works illustrative of nineteenth century practices, some (such as the water-cure) continuing into mid-twentieth century. This material indicates the blending of “mental” and “physical” theories of causation and represents the period before psychiatry split off definitely from general medicine and natural healing.

The NLM has an extensive collection of literature, reports and archival materials reflective of the development of institutional psychiatry throughout the nineteenth century. Particularly interesting are the materials pertaining to asylums and the developing discourse on madness in the United States, Great Britain and the British colonies. In addition, the library makes available numerous contemporary studies of this period ranging from general works on the history of the asylum to studies of specific institutions.

We have divided this section into several subheadings. First, we list a number of representative and helpful contemporary studies. Second, under "Treatment of patients and management of asylums," we give a representative, but by no means exhaustive, listing of nineteenth century materials on the care, housing and treatment of the insane. Third, we list a few examples of lunacy laws and other legislative actions on the care and housing of the insane. Fourth, we have gathered a sample of the library's holdings of original reports from asylums in the US, Great Britain and the British colonies. Finally, under "Early texts and case studies," we place writings by doctors, alienists and late-nineteenth century psychiatrists, on the nature of madness, with descriptions of individual cases. We do not include here the literature on mesmerism and other nineteenth century forms of mental healing which can be found in the Prehistory of Psychiatry section.

Historical Studies

These are useful guides with particular emphasis on nineteenth century institutions, including both detailed case studies and more general descriptions of developments during the century as a whole.

Treatment of patients and management of asylums: contemporary accounts

This category consists of a variety of investigations, observations, "hints," advice, testimony and various addresses and speeches, mostly from the 19th century. Much of this material exhorts readers as to proper moral treatment of the insane and/or what is necessary to the proper development and management of asylums. Some works here – Tuke, Earle and Conolly, for example – were important in the development of "moral treatment."

Asylum annals and reports:

The library has collected over one hundred years of assorted reports, annals, and testimonials from the numerous insane asylums of the nineteenth and early-to-mid twentieth centuries. Annals and biennial reports are generally in the form of pamphlets or bound volumes containing a description of the asylum's operations and plans, with pleas for funding, detailed lists of expenses, lists of patients admitted and discharged (including diagnoses and places of origin) and reports on such activities as farming and sewing carried out by patients. Announcements, accounts, lists of rules and regulations, and other materials provide additional information.

First-hand accounts, texts and case studies

Asylum doctors (alienists) and general practitioners (regular medicine) wrote texts and treatises on madness that become increasingly "psychiatric" as the nineteenth century wears on. These works include detailed case histories of individual patients, with description of symptoms, rich biographical detail, treatments provided and etiological theories. In these works it possible to see the gradual separation of "mind" from body as the earliest combine humoral and homeopathic theories and explain mental symptoms as physical while later texts are more focused on the classification of psychiatric illness and their differentiation from one another.

The library holds the papers of Shobal Clevenger, a late nineteenth/early twentieth century American psychiatrist and reformer, who held a brief tenure as medical superintendent of Eastern Illinois Hospital for the Insane in Kankakee. The library also has extensive photographs from the Kankakee hospital (in the image collection).

Biographical/Historical Note

Clevenger was a surveyer, editor, reformer, psychiatrist and author. His medical contributions were chiefly in the field of neuro-pathology. A biography by Victor Robinson, Don Quixote of Psychiatry, was published in 1919.

Son of a Cincinnati stonecutter-turned-sculptor, Shobal Vail Clevenger, Jr. (1843-1920) was born during a family visit to Italy. He grew up in various places in Ohio, Alabama, New Orleans and St. Louis. He became a surveyor for the U.S. Engineer Corps during the Civil War. After the war he continued as a civil engineer, building the first telegraph terminus in the Dakota Territory at Yankton before becoming Chief engineer for the Dakota Southern Railway. When he tried to expose western land and Indian Department misdeeds in Washington, D.C. he became disillusioned with politicians and corruption and abandoned engineering for an education in medicine.

In 1879 he graduated from the Chicago Medical College (now Northwestern University) and pursued an interest in neuro-pathological studies. Hired as a pathologist at the Insane Asylum of Cook County at Dunning, Illinois, Clevenger agitated to end criminal use of facilities and funds by officials and the consequent mistreatment and neglect of patients. Attempts on his life persuaded him to resign his position in 1884, although his continued campaign for reform resulted in some convictions. In 1893, Clevenger was appointed medical superintendent of the Illinois Eastern Hospital for the Insane in Kankakee. He again opposed state and county officials who stole from the institution and abused patients. His tenure in Kankakee lasted only three months. He was appointed professor of neurology and psychiatry at the Harvey Medical College in 1900, and later taught at the Chicago College of Medicine.

An exploration of the history of psychotropic drugs would need to take into account events in scientific research in neurology and pharmacology, perspectives from the pharmaceutical industry, Federal and state governments, and clinical practice and theory. In addition, one would need to investigate shifts in social and ethical issues, medical teaching, as well as popular culture in print and other visual media. The collections of the NLM and the HMD contain rich and abundant materials on all these aspects of the subject. The selections below represent particularly fruitful areas for research. (The closely related topic of addiction is covered in a final separate section, because of its length).

Research in neurology and pharmacology

Part of the Profiles in Science series, this site contains unique materials on the history of the discovery of the interaction among neurotransmitters (the reuptake hypothesis) by Julius Axelrod that formed the cornerstone of the modern development of psychotropic pharmaceuticals. The site includes Axelrod's published papers, excerpts from his laboratory notes, and links to his Nobel Prize acceptance speech.

The pharmaceutical industry

The collection contains interviews conducted by Edward Shorter in connection with his book The Health Century (1987). His interviewees included industry representatives from companies such as Merck, Pfizer, and Bristol-Myers as well as important figures in the NIH. The interviews deal with the interaction since 1945 between academic medicine, private research, and the NIH.

Interviews with NIMH officials.

From the collection summary: “The collection contains interviews with 42 former directors and other individuals significant to the foundation and early history of the National Institute of Mental Health. Dr. Eli A. Rubenstein conducted the interviews between the years 1975-1978, with the hope of publishing a book about the institute. Unfortunately he was never able to write the book. Consequently, in 1989 he gave his interview collection to the NIMH when James Pittmana proposed creation of a formal oral history program. This program never came to life when funding did not become available.”

Forensic Psychiatry

Forensic Psychiatry.....
Nineteenth century forensics.....
The law and the problem of insanity.....
Psychology and the criminal mind.....
Ethics and forensic psychiatry

Materials available at the NLM in forensic psychiatry range widely across legal, diagnostic, institutional and popular accounts. In the first section below are representative works from the 19th century including classics (such as the work of Isaac Ray), reports of legal cases, case studies of criminals, and general works on criminal responsibility and insanity during the period in which law and psychiatry were developing their modern relationship. Sections on “Law and psychiatry” and “The criminal mind” divide works roughly according to differences between the legal and the psychiatric/psychological/popular response to criminal responsibility and personality. The smaller section on ethics, consisting of more recent materials, illustrates increased concern in recent years with the conduct of forensic psychiatry itself.

Spitz, R. A., Wolf, K. M., Psychoanalytic Researchproject on Problems of, I., New York University. Film, L. (1953). Shaping the personality [motion picture] : (the role of mother-child relations in infancy) : a film. United States: New York University Film Library.9704073

This film illustrates forms of mother-child relations and their influence on the child. A brief anamnesis of the mother's pregnancy is confronted with her behavior during breast feeding in an attempt to present the biological and psychological factors which will influence the emergent mother-child relations and which will decide the future attitude of the mother to her child. Five mothers, breast feeding their babies, are successively shown. The first, patient, loving, and secure; the second, outgoing, with mild anxiety; the third, concerned, but without hostility; the fourth, rejecting and hostile to her child; the fifth, hostile to an unwanted child. The behavior of the mothers in feeding and playing situations is shown to be an expression of their conscious wishes of what their child should be like. Part I: The influence of prenatal conditions. Part II. The influence of the mother's conscious and unconscious wishes.

Bernard, V. W., & Film Documents, I. [Quiet one] [motion picture]: [United States] : Mayer-Burstyn, [1948].8901810A

Donald Peters is a mentally disturbed black boy, the victim of a disrupted home in Harlem, who at the age of ten is sent to the Wiltwyck School for Delinquent Boys. With the aid of the psychiatrist and counselors, he receives training and emotional support which help him grow emotionally stronger. His behavior includes running away, stealing, destruction, skipping school, and self-flagellation. The film shows the school as a camp-like atmosphere which includes fishing, hiking, butterfly catching, crafts, cooking, basketball, and checkers. Shots include New York City slums (exteriors and interiors), market places, and barber; child hitting self with telephone cord and later imitating counselor shaving; and boys fishing.

Acquisitions in process

It is anticipated that materials from the Sheppard Pratt Hospital in Baltimore, one of the most important private psychiatric hospitals in the US, founded in 1853, will soon be acquired by the HMD. These materials are likely to include film as well as archival records from the 19th century. Harry Stack Sullivan was one of the well-known practitioners at Sheppard Pratt.

An extensive collection of video recordings of family therapy done by Dr. Murray Bowen, focusing on two families over 12 years of therapy (1968-80) is in process. Dr. Bowen is well known for his contributions to family systems theory and family systems therapy.
