► THIS WEEK IN AIR FORCE HISTORY

Feb. 17, 2007 - The 45th Space Wing supported the launch of a Delta II booster from Cape Canaveral AFS, Fla., carrying five NASA 'THEMIS' probes to study auroral substorms, an avalanche of solar wind powered magnetic energy that intensifies the northern and southern lights. This was the largest number of NASA scientific satellites launched on a single booster. THEMIS stands for Time History of Events and Macroscale Interactions in Substorms.

Feb. 18, 1943 - The first class of 39 flight nurses graduated from the U. S. Army Air Forces School of Air Evacuations at Bowman Field, Ky.

Feb. 19, 1934 - Following President Franklin D. Roosevelt's Executive Order 6591, Secretary of War George Dern ordered the Army Air Corps to start flying domestic airmail.

Feb. 20, 1944 - On a mission to Leipzig, Germany, Sgt Archibald Mathies serve as the engineer and ball turret gunner on a B-17, when enemy aircraft attacked. Although the copilot died and the pilot and radio operator were wounded, Mathies and other crewmen still managed to fly to their home base at Glatton, England. Mathies and the navigator volunteered to attempt a landing after the other crewmen jumped to safety. The commanding officer ordered them to parachute, but both men refused to desert the badly wounded pilot, who could not jump. They crashed on their third attempted landing, and all died. Besides Mathies, two other Eighth Air Force officers, 1st. Lt William R. Lawley and 2nd Lt. Walter E. Truemper, received the Medal of Honor for separate actions.

Feb. 21, 1921 - Lt. William D. Coney, Air Service, completed a solo flight from Rockwell Field, San Diego, Calif., to Jacksonville, Fla. He covered 2,180 miles in 22 hours 27 minutes.

Feb. 22, 1945 - Aircraft from Eighth, Ninth, and Fifteenth Air Forces began an all-out assault on Nazi Germany communications and other transportation targets as a part of Operation Clarion.

Feb. 23, 1956 - Secretary of the Air Force Donald A. Quarles sped up the Navaho missile program, using a high national priority, second only to the ICBM and IRBM programs.
