I called Pippa today to make sure she was OK (I've been trying to call her every Monday but this is only the second time I've called her). My view here is that it's better to find out where she's headed than to wait until she gets there.

She has the following issues:

1. Wants an update on the war bonds bill and where it is in the Senate. I told her the last I heard we were expecting it to sail through the Senate, possibly by unanimous consent, but that I would have Amy Smith to get back to her. (I've asked Amy to do so).
2. Advises that the Enron situation is squarely in Peter's lap. Let's talk about this.
3. Had heard that there was some derivative legislation working its way through Congress and wanted to know more. I said I'd get back to her.
4. Wants to tour FinCEN. I said I'd set it up for her.
5. Wants to know who is overseeing the implementation (through regulation) of the anti-money laundering bill. I was going to suggest that Ken get a report on this from Jimmy and Aufhauser. OK?

That's all.
