Department of Health and Human Services Awards $1 Million in Grants for Indian Children and Youth Programs

The Department of Health and Human Services (HHS), awarded $1 million for American Indian and Alaska Native children and youth projects in rural and urban communities. The grants will fund 22 projects. The HHS Indian Health Service (IHS) funded 17 projects and the HHS Administration for Native Americans (ANA) funded an additional 5 programs.

“The youth of today face many challenges. In addition to the guidance they receive from their family and community, programs funded through this initiative can make a positive difference in a child’s life that will continue into adulthood.” stated Dr. Charles W. Grim, IHS Director. “When children are provided with positive guidance and support through appropriate programs, they can successfully meet the challenges of today. Children and Youth Programs are valuable in helping young people set goals and develop high self-esteem.”

The grantees projects range from behavioral health and clinical services for severely impaired youth, to teen clinic care. They include after school programs, leadership and career mentoring, childcare courses, basketball camps to promote exercise, helmet injury prevention curricula, programs designed to reduce injuries and promote youth fitness, and age specific programs for middle school children.

“The Tribes, ANA, and IHS recognize the social disparities and cultural barriers that many Indian youth face today. Together we will continue to improve the health of our future generations by developing more options for our youth, family and communities,” stated Quannah Crossland Stamps, ANA Commissioner.
