

History

White House Health Care Interdepartmental Working Group

As a part of his Health Care Reform initiative, President Clinton simultaneously created the Task Force on National Health Care Reform and the White House Health Care Interdepartmental Working Group on January 25, 1993. The cabinet-level Task Force, chaired by First Lady Hillary Rodham Clinton, was given primary responsibility for providing advice and making recommendations to the President regarding the national health care reform package. The Interdepartmental Working Group, a separate entity from the Task Force, was created to gather information on previous health care reform initiatives, generate ideas and formulate alternative options in meetings, and present those options for consideration by the Task Force. The scope of their research included state and international health care policies. Both the Task Force and the Interdepartmental Working Group were given instructions to fulfill their duties in consideration of President Clinton's goal to have a comprehensive national health care reform bill passed within the first hundred days of his administration.

The Interdepartmental Working Group was loosely organized into a hierarchical structure of cluster groups, working groups, and subgroups. The Working Group included over 500 participants from both the public and private sector. The participants represented federal agencies, state agencies, congressional offices, non-profit organizations, health care professionals and activists.

The concept of membership in working groups was loosely defined and extremely fluid; individuals moved from one group to another or new participants were added when their knowledge on an issue was needed. Overall responsibility for the organic design of the Interdepartmental Working Group rested with Ira Magaziner, White House Senior Domestic Policy Advisor. Later, Magaziner took a role as an advisor to the working groups, a "sounding board" for new ideas from various participants, and a representative who forwarded the working groups final proposals to the Task Force.

The records of the Interdepartmental Working Group were opened as a result of an agreement to end litigation. The American Association of Physicians and Surgeons (AAPS) filed a lawsuit against Hillary Rodham Clinton and others on February 24, 1993. The plaintiffs and the Federal Government disagreed over whether or not the records of the Task Force and Interdepartmental Working Group fell under the regulations of the Federal Advisory Committee Act (FACA). The Federal Government argued against AAPS's case, resulting in litigation that extended into 1994. In an attempt to end the lawsuit, the White House decided to open the records of the Interdepartmental Working Group. On August 17, 1994, the White House announced the release of the records at the National Archives and Records Administration for public review. The White House defined the records as presidential because the Working Group served an indirect advisory role to the President.

The records were first made available to researchers at the National Archives and Records Administration on September 7, 1994.

WHITE HOUSE HEALTH CARE INTERDEPARTMENTAL WORKING GROUP
PARTICIPANT'S WORKING PAPERS

After the Interdepartmental Working Group's termination on May 31, 1993, participants submitted working group files to the White House. The series Participant's Working Papers document the numerous ideas and debate among the working group members. Health care topics include insurance reform, benefits packages, purchasing cooperatives, fraud and abuse, care for underserved populations, mental health, AIDS, and long term care. The Interdepartmental Working Group's research covers health care policies in U.S. states, U.S. territories, Indian nations, and other countries. The Participant's Working Papers contain membership lists, correspondence, meeting schedules, meeting summaries, talking points, presentations, draft option papers, edited portions of briefing books, and background articles. In addition to organizing internal meetings, the working group members consulted with special interest groups as part of an extensive undertaking to foster public participation in the working group process. As a result, this series contains a variety of background articles, special studies, videos, and publications submitted by groups such as Jackson Hole, American Medical Association, AARP, and American Bar Association. This series also contains personal observations of working group members in the form of handwritten notes, calendars, and journals.

The Participant's Working Papers are arranged alphabetically by participant's last name. In the cases where a participant had no clear file arrangement, the list identifies the issue - related working group(s) in which an individual participated. For the most part, the material spans from January 25, 1993 to May 31, 1993. Some participant's working papers include "Clinton '93," campaign material. The Interdepartmental Working Group used these materials for background and research purposes. Material that pre - dates January 25, 1993 has been indicated on the folder - title list.
