

Thomas Sides

For over fifteen years, Tom Sides has been an adult education instructor specializing in small business topics such as: business start-ups, business planning, marketing, setting prices, and contracting with government agencies. He holds a Masters degree in Business Economics from the University of Maryland, and a Masters degree in Public Administration from American University. Currently he is on the teaching staffs for Prince George's Community College, Montgomery County Public Schools, Fairfax County Public Schools, Arlington County Public Schools, and City of Alexandria Public Schools.

In the past, Mr. Sides has created and operated sole proprietorships, partnerships, and corporations in the Washington Metropolitan Area. While his small business workshops are developed on the solid foundation of accepted business theories, an emphasis is made to focus on the practical day-to-day skills required to operate a successful business enterprise.
