ROREA. Special Hospitel in Manchuria for "International Volunteer Army." reports that s special hospital has been established at Suifembo (in northeastern Manchuria near the Sino-Soviet bordor) to cere for seriously wounded North Korsen, Outer Mongolian, Japanese, and German troops and for Soviet aviators and techniciens. 18 Apr 51). COMMENT: This is the first mention of German "troops" in connection with the Korsen War although previous reports dealing with the "IVA"which remains unconfirmedhave stated that Mangolians and Japanese would perticipate in the Korean War as ground units. It is very doubtful that a special hospital of such an "international" character would include facilities for North Koreans. Nutrition Problem Serious Among Chinese Communist Troops. observes that troops at the front (in Korea) are suffering semi-starvation because they are unable to light cooking fires for fear of air attacks. Large quantities of prepared foods are being shipped into Korea from Manchuria but the food is not arriving on time. 18 Apr 51). COMMENT: All aveilable evidence supports the above views concerning a serious shortage of food among Chinese Communist troops in Korea. This, however, is the first occasion that such shortages have been attributed to lack of preparation facilities rather than to lack of food itself.			HR70
reports that a special hospital has been established at Sulfenho (in northeastern Manchuria near the Sino-Soviet border) to care for seriously wounded North Korean, Outer Mongolian, Japanese, and German troops and for Soviet aviators and techniciens. (•	japanak
reports that a special hospital has been established at Sulfenho (in northeastern Manchuria near the Sino-Soviet border) to care for seriously wounded North Korean, Outer Mongolian, Japanese, and German troops and for Soviet aviators and techniciens. (
reports that a special hospital has been established at Sulfenho (in northeastern Manchuria near the Sino-Soviet border) to care for seriously wounded North Korean, Outer Mongolian, Japanese, and German troops and for Soviet aviators and techniciens. (ree .
reports that a special hospital has been established at Sulfenho (in northeastern Manchuria near the Sino-Soviet border) to care for seriously wounded North Korean, Outer Mongolian, Japanese, and German troops and for Soviet aviators and techniciens. (
reports that a special hospital has been established at Sulfenho (in northeastern Manchuria near the Sino-Soviet border) to care for seriously wounded North Korean, Outer Mongolian, Japanese, and German troops and for Soviet aviators and techniciens. (
reports that a special hospital has been established at Sulfenho (in northeastern Manchuria near the Sino-Soviet border) to care for seriously wounded North Korean, Outer Mongolian, Japanese, and German troops and for Soviet aviators and techniciens. ( established at Sulfenho (in northeastern Manchuria near the Sino-Soviet border) to care for seriously wounded North Korean, Outer Mongolian, Japanese, and German troops and for Soviet aviators and techniciens. (18 Apr 51). COMMENT: This is the first mention of German "troops" in connection with the Korean War although previous reports dealing with the "IVA"which remains unconfirmedhave stated that Mongolians and Japanese would participate in the Korean War as ground units. It is very doubtful that a special hospital of such an "international" character would include facilities for North Koreans. Nutrition Problem Serious Among Chinese Communist Troops. Observes that troops at the front (in Korea) are suffering semi-starvation because they are unable to light cooking fires for fear of air attacks. Large quantities of prepared foods are being shipped into Korea from Manchuria but the food is not arriving on time. (18 Apr 51). COMMENT: All available evidence supports the above views concerning a serious shortage of food among Chinese Communist troops in Korea. This, however, is the first occasion that such shortages have been attributed to lack of prepara-		KOREA. Special Hospital in Manchuria for "International Volunteer Army," established at Sulfenho (in northeastern Manchuria near the Sino-Soviet border) to care for seriously wounded North Korean, Outer Mongolian, Japanese, and German troops and for Soviet aviators and techniciens. (18 Apr 51). COMMENT: This is the first mention of German "troops" in connection with the Korean War although previous reports dealing with the "IVA"which remains unconfirmedhave stated that Mongolians and Japanese would participate in the Korean War as ground units. It is very doubtful that a special hospital of such an "international" character would include facilities for North Koreans. Nutrition Problem Serious Among Chinese Communist Troops. Observes that troops at the front (in Korea) are suffering semi-starvation because they are unable to light cooking fires for fear of air attacks. Large quantities of prepared foods are being shipped into Korea from Manchuria but the food is not arriving on time. (18 Apr 51). COMMENT: All available evidence supports the above views concerning a serious shortage of food among Chinese Communist troops in Korea. This, however, is the first occasion that such shortages have been attributed to lack of prepara-		reports that a special hospital has been	v - 1
Japanese, and German troops and for Soviet aviators and techniciens. (established at Sulfenho (in northeastern Manchuria near the Sino-Soviet of German "troops" in connection with the Korean War although previous reports dealing with the "IVA"which remains unconfirmedhave stated that Mongolians and Japanese would participate in the Korean War as ground units. It is very doubtful that a special hospital of such an "international" character would include facilities for North Koreans. Nutrition Problem Serious Among Chinese Communist Troops. Observes that troops at the front (in Korea) are suffering semi-starvation because they are unable to light cooking fires for fear of air attacks. Large quantities of prepared foods are being shipped into Korea from Manchuria but the food is not arriving on time. (Is Apr 51). COMMENT: All available evidence supports the above views concerning a serious shortage of food among Chinese Communist troops in Korea. This, however, is the first occasion that such shortages have been attributed to lack of prepara-		Japanese, and German troops and for Soviet aviators and techniciens.
reports dealing with the "IVA"which remains unconfirmedhave stated that Mcngolians and Japanese would participate in the Korean War as ground units. It is very doubtful that a special hospital of such an "international" character would include facilities for North Koreans. Nutrition Problem Serious Among Chinese Communist Troops. Observes that troops at the front (in Korea) are suffering semi-starvation because they are unable to light cooking fires for fear of air attacks. Large quantities of prepared foods are being shipped into Korea from Manchuria but the food is not arriving on time. (Improved the shore views concerning a serious shortage of food among Chinese Communist troops in Korea. This, however, is the first occasion that such shortages have been attributed to lack of prepara-		[18 Apr 51). COMMENT : This is the first mention that Mongolians and Japanese would participate in the Korean War as ground units. It is very doubtful that a special hospital of such an "international" character would include facilities for North Koreans. Nutrition Problem Serious Among Chinese Communist Troops. observes that troops at the front (in Korea) are suffering semi-starvation because they are unable to light cooking fires for fear of air attacks. Large quantities of prepared foods are being shipped into Korea from Manchuria but the food is not arriving on time. (In the same of the same concerning a serious shortage of food among Chinese Communist troops in Korea. This, however, is the first occasion that such shortages have been attributed to lack of prepara-Nutrition Problem Serious Among Chinese Communist Troops. Observes that troops at the front (in Korea) are suffering semi-starvation because they are unable to light cooking fires for fear of air attacks. Large quantities of prepared foods are being shipped into Korea from Manchuria but the food is not arriving on time. (Improved the short of the short		that Mongolians and Japanese would participate in the Korean War as ground observes that troops at the front (in Korea) are suffering semi-starvation because they are unable to light cooking fires for fear of air attacks. Large quantities of prepared foods are being shipped into Korea from Manchuria but the food is not arriving on time. (18 Apr 51). COMMENT: All available evidence supports the above views concerning a serious shortage of food among Chinese Communist troops in Korea. This, however, is the first occasion that such shortages have been attributed to lack of prepara-
observes that troops at the front (in Korea) are suffering semi-starvation because they are unable to light cooking fires for fear of air attacks. Large quantities of prepared foods are being shipped into Korea from Manchuria but the food is not arriving on time. (18 Apr 51). COMMENT: All available evidence supports the above views concerning a serious shortage of food among Chinese Communist troops in Korea. This, however, is the first occasion that such shortages have been attributed to lack of preparafront (in Korea) are suffering semi-starvation because they are unable to light cooking fires for fear of air attacks. Large quantities of prepared foods are being shipped into Korea from Manchuria but the food is not arriving on time. (18 Apr 51). COMMENT: All available evidence supports the above views concerning a serious shortage of food among Chinese Communist troops in Korea. This, however, is the first occasion that such shortages have been attributed to lack of prepara-	_ to light cooking fires for fear of air attacks. Large quantities of prepared foods are being shipped into Korea from Manchuria but the food is not arriving on time. (18 Apr 51). COMMENT: All available evidence supports the above views concerning a serious shortage of food among Chinese Communist troops in Korea. This, however, is the first occasion that such shortages have been attributed to lack of prepara-	L is not arriving on time. (18 Apr 51). COMMENT : All available evidence supports the above views concerning a serious shortage of food among Chinese Communist troops in Korea. This, however, is the first occasion that such shortages have been attributed to lack of prepara-		to light cooking fires for fear of air attacks. Large quantities of available evidence supports the above views concerning a serious shortage of food among Chinese Communist troops in Korea. This, however, is the first occasion that such shortages have been attributed to lack of preparafirst occasion that such shortages have been attributed to lack of prepara-		available evidence supports the above views concerning a serious shortage
	-
	~
	prepis ravaiof firs

TOP SECRET

APPROVED FOR RELEASE DATE: 18-Mar-2010 6