Please continue your efforts to rid us from these scam artists who invade our email boxes. Just as the federal government protects our USPS mailboxes from being rendered useless by improper use, I would love to have the Federal Trade Commission rescue our email boxes. I cannot even allow my younger son to view his email without first screening it, it is so full of filth. And much is already being filtered by AOL. There are crude references to increasing male penis size, sex with family members, sex shown on video cameras, powerful narcotic drugs designed to reduce pain; you name it, these shysters will peddle it. And what really disturbs me is that my son's computer access is strictly monitored by his father and me; he visits only children's sites approved by me, or eBay auctions searching for collectibles. These people are targeting children with their lies and false advertising, and enticing children to view porno and buy drugs. Please stop them. Thank you. Sharon Stephenson
